

The business I selected was a cards and collectibles appraisal service. Customers who have items they are wanting to either sell to the store, put in their consignment shop, or have professionally graded can use the website to book an appointment with a relevant expert for help. This type of service allowed me to have several categories for different experts to specialize in, as well as multiple services that overlap between experts.

The mockup tool utilized was Figma. This made my workflow very efficient and their templates served as good jumping off points.

psacard.com was an inspiration for version A. I liked the cycling front page and the cards below to take you to information about each expert.

youtube.com was an inspiration for version B. While their website is much more dense, I like the hamburger style menu to navigate pages and having the important information all displayed on the first screen you see Version A is a more navigation based design with a header and footer.

Version B is a more card / popup based design with a hamburger menu.
